From the Mobile Register and Advertiser. The Battle of Somerset.

The reverse to the Confederate arms at Somerset, Kentucky, while severe in the loss of life and pros perty, is not so discouraging as the first accounts led us to suppose. Our troops were beaten, it is true, but it was by greatly superior numbers, and after a whole day of hard fighting. There was nothing in the retreat to show a loss of fighting prestige, or to impair the well earned morals of our army. The general opinion in Kentucky and Tennessee, in Southern cicles, is that the attack was a serious blunder, and that that bane of the army, liquor, had something to do with it. There were, thank Heaven, no Bull Run features displayed in the retreat. The beaten army retired across the Cumberland under a heavy fire, and the fact that they took time to spike their guns and throw them into the river, and to burn the stores which they could not remove, shows there was nothing like

The story that the Confederate force was in full retreat on Knoxville, Tennessee, turns out to be a was doing with 2 000 horses, unless a large part of the force was cavairy, and in that case the facility of escape renders the story improbable. Let us draw consolation from this reverse in the consideration that it may impart a useful lesson. We have been over confident, and it is never safe to despise an enemy until he is beaten. We have been spoiled, too, by successes, and forget that the beat troops and most victorious generals are sometimes liable to defeat and the casualties of war.

Undoubtedly the great loss suffered by the Confederate cause in this unfortunate battle is the faderate cause in this unfortunate faderate cause in the consideration for the faderate faderate faderate faderate of Nativille, two Dwel lings with signs in lings with battless of Nativille, two Dwel lings with battless of Nativille, two Dwel lings with battless of School faderates of School faderates of School faderates of School faderates of Nativille, two Dwel lings with battless of School faderates o federate cause in this unfortunate battle is the death of the gallant Zollicoffer. It is not only the loss of the talents and bravery of this leader in the field, but his great political influence in Past Tennessee that we have to deplore. His name will take its place in the story of this unnatural war as one of its heroes and martyrs. His blood is mingled in the libation poured out to freedom and patrictism with that of Garnett, Bee, Bartow, Jones, Martin and the rest. That precious blood is to be averged, and Southern soldiers are the appointed instruments of that secred duty. An Incident.

The Rev. WM M. CRUMLEY, Chaplain of the Georgis Hespital at Riehmond, communicates the following incident to the Atlanta Confederacy:

I always feel a deep interest in young men. Here I have a fine chance to see them tested. Many are worsted by the terrible ordeal of camp life; but some are like gold, and shine the brighter by the rubbing. Some time since we had a convalescent patient frem one of the Georgia regiments. He was tall, slender, with dark hair and pale face. His eyes were deep and had a tinge of sea green, that made him look calm, deep and sublime, like the ocean at rest. While in camp, after a day of heavy picket duty, he fell asleep at his post at night, for which he was reported to the Colonel, who, to impress him, and make an example for the benefit of the regiment, called him in solemn pomp to a trisl.

He was found guilty, and the sentence of the court was to be shot. The Colonel, however, i view of his youth, and the extenuating circumstances of the case, commuted his sentence, and consented that in lieu of being shot, he might be sent home to Georgis-in disgrace. The youth drew himself up to his full height, and firmly replied: "Colonel, if it will serve my country by ad ding to the efficiency of the army, to be shot, here am, a sacrifice for its altar; but to go home to Georgia, IN DISGRACE, I NEVER WILL!" It was some time before he could be convinced that it was a sham trial; but it showed what nort of stuff he was made of. The world will, some day, hear from this young man, if his life is A. Barn a proposes to run Toodles against any horse, mare, or fermerly the residence of Mrs. C. M. Smith, doe'd. Said residence of Mrs. C. M. Smith, doe'd. day, hear from this young man, if his life is

LINCOLNDON " DAMNED AND DONE FOR. "-We have lately reperused, with infinite amusement, says the more to make a race. New Orleans Picayune, some editorals of the Lin-coln press written at the opening of this war. As a specimen of the spirit and hopeful character of the whole, we called the following from the lucubration of the Tribuns philosopher. It must be admitted that the philosophic Horace has some claims to the title of prophet, for if the United are not "damned and done for," then the story of Troy, of Carthage, &c., is a myth:

Shall we end the war? When shall we end it? Aye, there's the rub! In thirty days? Perhaps so. In three months? Assuredly so, or use are damned

Knoxville cannot be nearer than one hundred miles from the field of battle. It is now stated that the army halted at Monticello, which is in the county of Wayne, adjoining and immediately south of Pulsaki county, in which the battle was fought.

The account states that only three Confederate regiments were engaged. None of the accounts make our force over 6,000 men. Yet it is stated that we lost 2,000 horses and 300 wagons. It is not easy to understand what a column of 6,000 men was done with 2,000 horses, unless a large part of the undersigned.
